Takao Commercial Geot (to strangers in the train). "What's your name?" "I'm a brain." "Takao! Commercial Geot (surprisedly): "I'm a brain? How do you sell 'em?" "Stun' ger! By the gods! I'm a lawyer."

The patients now under treatment at Guy's Hospital include a large black and white mongrel dog, which a few days ago was seen to enter the hospital ground and hop on three legs in the direction of the surgery. "Sous' children" drew the attention of a student to the dog, and his look into the doghouse, where an examination for poisons was being made, showed that the dog had been injured. His leg was set, but as soon as the dog was well enough to take its discharge from the surgery, where the students supply it with food. They have named the four-legged patient "Jack."

It is reported from Augsburg that Dr. Lehner, a chemist, has invented an artificial silk which will now be manufactured on a large scale. The cost of production of this material, which cannot be distinguished as regards texture from genuine silk, is about a quarter of the cost of the latter. The strength of the new silk is only two-thirds of that of the natural. The elasticity of the artificial is equal to that of natural silk and exceeds it in colour and other respects. The inventor hopes to establish a branch of industry in Augsburg. A company will be started for the purpose of developing the manufacture of artificial silk.

Although it is now nearly sixty years since Charles Lamb died, the little cottage in which he and his sister resided at Edmonton shows but little evidence of external change, excepting a few small alterations made after his death, with its gables facing the roadway, its red-tiled roof and whitened walls. Its narrow doorway and small-paneled windows, give the impression of old-world comfort and seclusion. A rose tree, on the branches of which hang clusters of red berries, stands at the gateway, and its autumnal appearance gives it now a pictorial attractiveness to the interesting residence which is still known as "Lamb's Cottage."

We find the following incident recorded in a little magazine published by the Caledonian Insurance Company, entitled "The Caledonian Jottings," and intended for private circulation among the agents and offices of the institution. The paragraph is as follows: "Did our readers ever wonder of how much money paid for a service? A policyholder recently wrote, 'My wife and I have just had a false tooth into the first molar tooth, and we have proceeded to claim four guineas for the damage. The lady got a new set at the expense of the Caledonian Insurance Company. If any of our other policyholders have had their old teeth replaced with patent work, we hope they will not fail, when they come, to stand at a distance from the firm.'"

A French journal narrates the following amusing story. An officer was lately serving as a juror, and lost his right arm on service, and was taking the oath of allegiance held in place of his right hand. A man who was appointed to the officer on the ground that he had not taken the oath in the prescribed way, upon which the Court considered the case, and decided that what was "glorious debris" of the arm was not fit to be held in the hands of a man of such a character, was ordered to make a new one, and was given a wooden prosthesis. The lady got a new set at the expense of the Caledonian Insurance Company. If any of our other policyholders have had their old teeth replaced with patent work, we hope they will not fail, when they come, to stand at a distance from the firm."

Here is another version of the story about the Prince of Wales from an American paper—the Recorder—which evidently has never been a cause of knowledge of H.R.H.—"The Prince, and a friend he was staying in Yorkshire—going for a walk, and was turning the corner of a lane, comes across a minor who had been stung by a bull-terrier pup. The Prince's companion asked the man how much he had paid for the pup. 'Two guineas,' replied the minor, with true aristocratic levity. The Prince examined the dog critically, and then remarked, 'I think they must be two pigs we have been a better investment for the future.' 'Maybes,' replied the minor; 'but, in fact, what a blooming fool a chap would look going scratchin' with two pigs!' The argument was resolved, and the Prince, with his friend, retired."

By the death of the Rev. Frederick Arnold in his fifty-ninth year, a well-known personality in literary and clerical circles had disappeared. Mr. Arnold, who during his university days was a brilliant speaker at the Oxford Union, was for many years a regular contributor of articles to the leading English periodicals and periodicals. He was the author of various books including a "History of Greece," a "Life of Lord Macaulay," "Memoirs of Oxford and Cambridge," and "Our Bishops and Clergy." Essays, "Achilles," "Ulysses," "Thomé," and "Eusebius," which he anonymously enjoyed a widely popular reception, and were followed by another volume, also successful, of "Achilles and Eusebius." He was the anonymous author of two volumes of "Classical and Literary Reminiscences," which appeared about two years since. Mr. Arnold held at different periods various curricula and charges at home and abroad, and was an extempore preacher of considerable power.

It is not generally known that the late General Gordon had his fortune most accurately told by an astrologer, who predicted that he would die ten weeks before the fall of the City. General Gordon's life had been examined without his identity being disclosed by a Madame Raival, well known as a fortune-teller. "You are," she said, "in an unhappy situation for the General will be the victim of War, but you will not keep it. A fall from a horse is likely, but not certain. Later on you will attain an even higher position. The lines of your hand indicate that you will almost reach 'the throne'." A little later Madame Raival was told that it was General Gordon to whom she had made these predictions. She is reported, in that case I am glad I did not tell him, that her prediction was in his hand that he will die a violent death. This is not one of the legends that have gained currency since the General's death. The prediction was at the time quoted in the Figaro, and copied into an English newspaper, a cutting from which has been forwarded to me by a correspondent."

Crickets is indeed becoming a rage, so much so, that the ranks of the game are recruited a little when they view the commotion it causes everywhere. It is dreaded lest it be the last flicker in the socket which is to chronicle the brilliant disappearance of the grand old game before it disappears entirely. Cricket, however, is cricket, is certain to be the bone and blood of the last interesting thing concerning it is the new development, Lady cricketing. Already a number of some of the sporting dailies is devoted to Lady cricket, whose scores are chronicled and news received in quite orthodox sport columns. The latest issue of Sporting Life contains an interesting account of a match at Hastings on the Central Cricket Recreation Ground. It was a two-day match, in which all the players were ladies, the sides being Reds v. Blues, the match being for the benefit of Lady cricketors. It rained a little during the first day, and the game was closed at 2 p.m. for four weeks, after which a little one realises that we are in the "Woman's age," puts it down to the 4th Decade, and gives up trying to understand it. The Reds, we are told, completed their first innings for 127 V. The Blues, who had a strong opening and a good exponent of the game, The Reds began with 201, which was obtained with a loss of only four wickets when the innings was declared closed. E. Heather, the Captain, scored 82, while L. St. John, 68, and A. H. Fletcher, 48, added 100 runs. The Reds then took a forcible state of things. The Reds began with 201, and added 100 to their total. V. Westwood, the Captain, again came to the front, with 35, leaving his opponents 92 to win. In this they were not unsuccessful. Fane being very deadly with the ball, and the match ended in a win for the Reds by 27 runs. This is what the tales do now. We will have some competition, and then—what will become of cricket?

THE MYSTERY OF ARABELLA VILLA.

I am the secretary of the Anti-Burglar Association. The society has been formed to protect the persons and property of all, and it is quite a success. We have a responsible committee which has got the better because it was said to be a wonderful organizer. I have organized lots of things. The first thing I organized was the benefit for Signor Tremolo on the occasion of his losing his voice. It was a thoroughly genuine case—that of Tom Shifflet, who had lost his voice. Tom and his good friend Dr. Tom Shifflet, went to the public he was Signor Tremolo, Wall. I organized that monster benefit of his. We took St. James's Hall, and Adolphus Pashard's name as honorary secretary. I declined to take a fee for my services, appeared on the platform, and paid him £100. We took up a collection for the cause; every one sold an thousand dollars of the performances. But I had spent too much in advertising, and Signor Tremolo was fifteen pounds out of pocket. I regret to say he has ceased to know me now; there is a terrible amount of bad publicity about the whole. This I consider the English Homeless Fighting Fund Association. We were a United company, we bought some old barges cheap, and we converted them into home-boats by means of Willemer Paper. But we were wrecked by the vagrancy of the British public; our customers used to come along through the partition walls of the office room, and make rude remarks to the great next door.

But the Anti-Burglar Society Association has, I am happy to say, turned out a tremendous success. My poster did it, my artful poster. On my poster a gentlewoman, her wife, was shown in a boat, holding a child. She was a masked burglar of various aspects, wearing a revolver at them. "Tom Shifflet, holding up my hand in token of his performances," said "Dolly."

"...as you banged first!" cried Mr. Thomas Shifflet, and he boomed out of my office—St. James's Gazette.
